

IGAMING MANAGEMENT COMMENTS ON U.S. UNLAWFUL INTERNET GAMBLING ENFORCEMENT ACT

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, October 3, 2006 - (TSX VENTURE EXCHANGE: IGA).

On September 29, 2006 both Houses of the U.S. Congress passed the Safe Port Act, onto which was attached the Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act of 2006 (the "UIGE Act"). This legislation will come into force upon President Bush's signature, which is expected to be provided in the near future, and made into law 270 days thereafter. The essence of the UIGE Act prohibits the acceptance or use of any payment instrument in any financial transaction for the purposes of unlawful internet gambling. The UIGE Act is presumably directed to blocking out the different forms and methods of payments involved with Internet Gaming. Questions regarding the effectiveness of financial institutions identifying and restricting transactions involving Internet Gaming should be answered within the 270 days the UIGE Act is to be implemented.

Management of iGaming Corporation (the "Company" or "iGaming") is currently assessing the UIGE Act and determining how it will affect the Company. Presently, management does not believe that the UIGE will have a significant negative impact on revenues derived from its portfolio of handicapper websites, nor from the revenues produced by its LineTracker.com client server product (previously called SportsTracker).

The Company's strategic plan involves the securing of long-term advertising contracts with online sportsbooks, casinos and poker operators. If the UIGE's enactment results in the closing down of gaming operators, the Company's future advertising business may be negatively affected. It should be noted, however, that the Company has a valuable segmented market demographic following and can therefore sell its available advertising space to other business models, including land-based operators of casinos, sportsbooks and poker rooms, as well as other product and service advertisements targeting our current market segment.

Management will be continually monitoring the legal landscape both in the U.S. and Canada and will act accordingly to protect its shareholders' interests. Most importantly, the Company intends to comply with all local and international laws in order to protect and increase shareholder value.

iGaming's President and Chief Executive Officer Christopher Kape stated, "We are not an operator of gaming sites, and are therefore not subject to the same direct negative impact that this new law may have on our competition. Our focus remains the lawful sale of handicapper and sports information, while attempting to supplement such revenue with advertising contracts from selling space on our highly trafficked, market-segmented website properties. Previous to the announcement of this new law, online gaming operators were targeted as our main source of marketing revenues, however, there are many other businesses which would be very willing to advertise their products and services to their target markets on our portfolio of websites."
